WHAT'S INSIDE

Best and Worst Easter Candies

eat this, not that

This order of preference is good news from a dental perspective.

Americans will spend millions of dollars on billions of pounds of candy.

It's Easter this month—

the second largest candy-

selling holiday of the year

(after Halloween).

According to a survey by the National Confectioners Association, chocolate bunnies/eggs are most people's favorite item (55% of respondents), followed by candy-coated eggs, jelly beans, and marshmallow creations. Ideally we wouldn't eat any sugar, but because we're human and need to enjoy ourselves sometimes, moderation and type of candy is key, as well as dental hygiene.

Chocolate, particularly the dark variety, has health benefits, and less sugar.

Sticky candy, such as jelly beans and gummies, are the worst offender, because they are extremely high in sugar—and sometimes citric acid—and can get stuck in place for hours. Lollipops or other candies you suck on also linger too long.

The longer sugar is in your mouth, the more bacteria feed off of it and produce acid that wears away enamel.

If you eat candy, eat it all at once, promptly rinse with water, and brush, floss and use mouthwash as part of your normal cleaning routine.
